

Indiana has an extremely good telephone privacy act that I would hate to see weakened by an over-riding federal ruling. At one time we were getting an average of 6-8 telephone sales calls EVERY evening - mainly during the dinner hour. Since the Indiana law has gone into effect, we seldom get a sales call. I think we have received only one in the past two months. This law has been the best consumer-interest law that I have ever personally experienced.

The Indiana privacy act would be a good law for the federal government to emulate. But PLEASE, do not take action that would weaken it.
